The Angel of Death came is to our midst last Thursday, and left the home of Mr. Paul Frost desolate, with a husband and two little boys to mourn mother's loss. Mrs. Frost had a host o friends, whose hearts go out in sympa thy to the bereaved. She was ill for months and though we all watched her gradual decline, yet we hardly expected the end so soon. . She was so sunny and bright, haying always a bright smile for those who came and went, and always insisted she was better and would yet grow strong; but alas, she sleeps the sleep that knows no awakening and sleep that knows no awakening and loved ones must take up the burden of life and press onward with the hope of a reunion in that "great day." Some one has sweetly said-"To live in hearts we leave behind, is not to die," and though the little home so recently planned and built is left empty and desolate, yet her influence liveth, and "God will finish what she has begun, if we keep the ineense burning there."
